Title	“On a Paper Crane – Tomoko’s Adventure” (animation)	“Junod” (animation)
Running time	27 minutes	63 minutes
Overview	Elementary school sixth-grade student Tomoko meets a girl named Sadako in front of the Children’s Peace Monument in Peace Memorial Park. Tomoko learns from Sadako about the atomic bombing on August 6, 1945, and about what happened to Sadako afterwards. Sadako Sasaki, the model for Sadako, was born in 1943 and experienced the bombing at two years of age. She grew up into a healthy young girl, but ten years after the bombing, was suddenly diagnosed with leukemia and hospitalized. Inspired by the 1,000 paper cranes gifted to her by those who came to visit her in the hospital, she started folding cranes with the wish to live, but at the end of an eight-month hospitalization, passed away surrounded by family. Afterwards, her classmates began raising funds, and the Children’s Peace Monument was built.	Middle school students Mii and Yuko visit Hiroshima Peace Memorial Park, and come across the monument dedicated to Dr. Junod. At that moment, the consciousness of the two girls reaches across time and space and flies to Europe over 70 years ago, where they learned about the life of Dr. Junod, who reached out to the suffering survivors in the battlefields. Dr. Marcel Junod, the Swiss doctor from the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), carried out humanitarian aid for sufferers of the war in Ethiopia and the Spanish Civil War, as well as World War II. While serving as head of the ICRC delegation in Japan, he saw the tragedy of Hiroshima after the bombing, and along with calling to the GHQ for support with medicine and medical supplies, carried out medical activities himself – saving the lives of many A-bomb survivors. This animation depicts half of Dr. Junod’s life.
